Who We Are

VYCC is a mission-driven organization where we strive to take action and build community by working and learning together with the land. VYCC's Food & Farm Program is a youth development, diversified agriculture and food security initiative. We believe in the power that food has to connect us with the land, our community, and each other.

On the farm, young people engage in the daily tasks of organic vegetable farming. The produce grown by Corps Members is distributed to more than 400 families through the Health Care Share – a public health initiative that connects Vermont families to locally-grown produce through their medical provider. Patients who may have nutrient-related illness or have barriers to accessing fresh produce receive a weekly share of fresh food. We also raise laying hens for eggs, chickens for meat, and additional vegetables, flowers, and herbs that we sell through our vibrant, on-site farm stand.

In addition to the work Corps Members do in the farm fields, they also spend time in the kitchen learning cooking skills. Working with the food they've grown, they explore different recipes and help prepare a daily lunch that is served to all farm crews, connecting the work in the fields to the food on their plates.

These projects are made possible through VYCC's partnership with AmeriCorps and SerVermont.

Who We're Looking For

A successful Community Health Leader is someone who strives to support crews, faces challenges with a positive attitude, and works toward personal and professional growth. We look for hard-working individuals who will demonstrate their passion for food access and public service through a commitment to VYCC's mission. They will bring experience or interest in developing skills in teaching, mentoring, or group facilitation.

What You Can Expect

The Community Health Leader assists in the administration of the Health Care Share (HCS). This role coordinates the logistics that provide over 400 Vermont families with a free weekly share of organic groceries during the summer and fall. In collaboration with the Community Health Manager, the Community Health Leader supports all aspects of the Health Care Share from patient enrollment and communications to weekly share packing and delivery. In the spring and fall, they will also spend some time with their hands in the soil, supporting all aspects of food production on the farm.

The VYCC farming season starts in March. Farm Leaders operate as a cohort that collaborates closely throughout the spring, building hands-on skills and knowledge of VYCC's food and farm systems. Prior to the start of summer season, Farm Leaders develop their leadership skills by guiding volunteer groups through hands-on farm tasks.

During the spring and summer, the Community Health Leader will work with our Health Care Share partners to enroll patients in the program. By mid-summer, with the support from Farm Staff, the Community Health Leader leads the weekly packing of the Health Care Shares and delivers produce to medical centers across Vermont.

During the fall, the Community Health Leader returns to the original Leader cohort guiding volunteer groups, overseeing the distribution of the Health Care Share, and preparing the farm for winter. They also collect surveys from Health Care Share participants and support program evaluation activities.

Farm Leaders will serve an average of 40–45 hours/week, Monday-Friday. Exact hours change with the season, including early morning starts during peak summer season. The hours will typically be between 7:45AM–4:45PM. There are occasional evening and weekend hours allocated for chores, delivering the Health Care Share or VYCC events.

Community Health Leaders spend ample time indoors coordinating with Health Care Share partners, packing and delivering Health Care Shares. They work outdoors with crews, as well, and interact with program partners, community members, and VYCC staff. They serve daily at VYCC's farm, which is located in Richmond, Vermont.
